LAURINDO ALMEIDA

Laurindo Almeida is the complete musician. One of the world's several truly great concert guitarists, he is ever being compared to Segovia, whom he knows and respects. In the past year he has played dozens of concerts, performing the works of the masters. Yet recently he toured much of the world as featured soloist with the Modern Jazz Quartet.

He brought Bossa Nova to the U.S. long before it was called that; he has scored many films, often composing, then playing his own music; and his famed recordings include everything from Bach to a beautiful solo album of Broadway favorites. Each of these things he has done superbly, for he is unique among guitarists, and is so acclaimed by audiences and critics alike.

Almeida was born in Sao Paulo, Brazil, on September 2, 1917. He received his earliest musical training from his mother, a concert pianist, who had chosen her own instrument for her son. His sister Maria was the guitar student, but it was Laurindo instead who mastered and fell in love with it.

It soon became evident that when Laurindo played guitar, others loved it as much as he did. This led to concerts in his home city, then in Rio de Janeiro, where his fame began to spread.
